Brooklyn, Aug. 23, 1840.

Mrs. Chapman:

Dear Friend,

I came to this place on Friday with bro. Garrison and wife, intending to return to Boston to-morrow [Monday.] By the earnest solicitations of the friends here, however, we have all concluded to remain until Tuesday. One thing, however, gives me a little anxiety; and it is on that account that I venture to write you this line. I am fearful that our compositors have not quite copy enough to keep them busy until our return on Tuesday noon; and I therefore ask you, if convenient, (and if you intend to report the proceedings for this week's paper,) to send them your sketch of the speeches made at the Marlboro' Chapel on Thursday evening, except that of bro. Garrison's remarks, which he would like to revise before it goes into their hands. If, for any reason, you have made arrangements to postpone the report, put yourself to no inconvenience on account of this request. I feel that I have not the least claim to a moment of your precious time, and write with some reluctance lest I should incommode you. Thinking it probable that you intend to make a report, I only ask you to send a portion of it to the Office, before our return, if you can do so without too much trouble.

Bro. Garrison gave a beautiful Address to the people here this (Sunday) afternoon, in relation to the pseudo World's Convention, and to the incidents of his delightful intercourse with British abolitionists, and the house is now full of "the faithful" who have gathered for a social chat. Much to our regret, George Benson is absent.

Yours faithfully, for the cause,

Oliver Johnson.

Maria W. Chapman.

P. S. Will you be good enough to request the compositor to set the report in "Brevier leaded."
